A Note from the Dean

Welcome to the Class of 2019, and welcome back to the Classes of 2017 and 2018. The beginning of a new academic year is always exciting, but it is especially exciting this year. In addition to having a great new first year class (which is described below), there are a number of other exciting additions and changes this year. We have an accomplished Visiting Professor of Law, Tracey Roberts, who is joining us to teach tax and property related courses. We added two outstanding new LLR instructors, Robin Andrews and Brian Noble, who will enable us to increase the number of LLR sections and provide more individual instruction. Andrea Shaw has been selected as the Interim Director of Cumberland's LLR Program. Lynn Hogewood has assumed the role of Director of Academic Support to coordinate and provide academic assistance to students as needed. Though behind schedule, the Trial Courtroom is being renovated. The carpet and furniture were back-ordered, but the renovation will be complete in September. The University added parking spaces and dramatically overhauled the parking and shuttle system in ways that I think will help the law school community.

With your arrival, the year is off to a great start. It will be a busy year, packed with events and opportunities. I hope this continued weekly newsletter will help connect all of us who make up Cumberland School of Law and thereby maintain and nurture the sense of community that is part of Cumberland's unique culture. The newsletter will serve to alert everyone to upcoming events and opportunities and to celebrate the many successes of Cumberland students, faculty, and staff. I hope students particularly will use the newsletter to learn about and take advantage of the many programs and extracurricular activities available to enrich your education, to become full participants in the legal profession, and to network with lawyers and other professionals.

Cassandra Adams has been promoted to the position of Assistant Dean for Public Interest Programs. She has served as Director of the Cumberland Community Mediation Center since 2005 and Director of Cumberland's Public Interest Program since 2013. Ms. Adams holds B.A. from Fisk University, an M.P.H. from Meharry Medical College, and J.D. from the University of Tennessee College of Law. She had extensive legal, public interest, and higher education experience before coming to Cumberland, including service as the Assistant Director of Admissions at Vanderbilt University Law School and the Director of Admissions at the University of Texas Law School.

This title recognizes and will facilitate her impactful work on behalf of Cumberland with countless public service organizations, the State Bar, the courts, the mediation community, and others.

In June, Adams was the recipient of the Alabama State Bar's 2016 Pro Bono Award for Mediation. As stated on the Bar's website: "Thanks to Cassandra Adams' efforts, more than 180 hours of pro bono mediation assistance was provided last year which helped 75 clients. Additionally, as the director of the Cumberland Community Mediation Center, Adams has trained volunteers to provide free and confidential mediation services to the greater Birmingham community."

Professor Bob Greene was quoted in an article in the Anniston Star of August 4 about a suit over E. coli in Choccolocco Creek near the Oxford wastewater plant.

Schirn Magazine, part of the Schirn Kunsthalle Frankfurt, published an essay in May by Professor Woodrow Hartzog '02 and Evan Selinger about facial recognition technologies titled "When Selfies Become Surveillance Beacons." The essay is part of the institution's "Me: The Limitless Self" group exhibition.

Hartzog's article with Lisa Shay, Greg Conti, and John Nelson, titled "Inefficiently Automated Law Enforcement," was published in the Michigan State Law Review.

Hartzog was quoted in the Canadian newspaper "The Globe and Mail" story titled "Paying Without Passwords and PINs."

Slate published an essay Hartzog wrote titled "There is No Such Thing as Public Data." He critiques the notion that as long as our personal information is "public," others can do anything they want with it.

Hartzog was quoted in this recent Fusion article, "Facebook is using your phone's location to suggest new friends—which could be a privacy disaster."

While in London, Hartzog gave two keynote talks. One at the Open Data Institute and one at an event hosted by the Web Science Institute

Faculty & Staff Notes

Professor Lynn Hogewood '03 was selected to fill the new position of Director of Academic Support. "As the Director of Cumberland's new Academic Support Program, I will provide assistance through hosting workshops, providing resources, conducting small group and individual sessions, and tutoring to all students to promote success in their legal studies beginning in their first year and in making a successful transition from graduation through the Bar exam. I will kick off the program with a series of Sunday afternoon and evening sessions through the fall semester as a place to connect with and provide specific assistance to first year students."

Adjunct Professor Judge Gary Pate has been hired by NBC to broadcast the Paralympic events that will take place in Rio from September 14-18.

Professor William Ross was quoted in The New York Times on August 3 and in The National Law Journal on August 8. The New York Times article stated, "William G. Ross, a law professor at Samford University...who has written extensively about legal fees, said wealthy defendants should not be faulted for spending money to hire the best lawyers they can afford. 'The sad part,' he said, 'is that those resources are not available in our society to people of modest means or the poor.'" The National Law Journal article quoted Professor Ross twelve times in an article about the role of the Supreme Court as an issue in presidential elections, a subject about which he has published a law review article and also addressed in various other of his publications.

Professor Andrea Shaw '10 has been selected as the Interim Director of Cumberland's Lawyering and Legal Reasoning (LLR) program for the 2016-2017 academic year.
